“Write Here” Debuts for Central Oregon Writers

Writers in Central Oregon have expanding opportunities to grow and develop into a complete writer thanks to the new “Write Here” series of programs, workshops, seminars, and author events. This ongoing, three-part series of programs is designed to feed and nourish the writing community of Central Oregon. Programs listed on page 5.

Three pillars of “Write Here” work together to provide writers of all levels with the tools and opportunities they need to succeed:

Writers Reading

Author events bring the local writing community into contact with contemporary writers working in a variety of genres. These events provide opportunities to engage with leaders in the literary arts. The library’s successful Second Sunday series, which brought celebrated regional and local writers to the Downtown Bend Library for more than 15 years, now runs under the Writers Reading series of programs.

“Deschutes Public Library has long held a commitment to fostering a vibrant writing community in Central Oregon,” says Chantal Strobel, the library’s Communications & Development Manager. “It’s shown through the variety of programs we host, including writing workshops and author presentations. Now, with ‘Write Here,’ the library further cements our commitment to Central Oregon’s writers. Plus, the sessions will give writers the opportunity to meet others with whom they can foster a writing community,” she adds.

“Write Here” programs are facilitated by experienced writing instructors from Central Oregon and the Pacific Northwest and are open to everyone with an interest in writing. Programs vary in location, time, and topic, but all “Write Here” programs are free, though space is limited and registration is often required to keep class sizes manageable. An evolving list of “Write Here” programs can be found at www.deschuteslibrary.org/writehere.

For February and March writing programs, check out the “Write Here” listing on page 5. Send questions about “Write Here” to writehere@deschuteslibrary.org.

Writers Writing

Workshops of up to three hours provide the opportunity for writers to practice their craft, explore working within a new genre, or polish a specific writing skill. The workshops are limited in size to provide a high-quality learning environment with plenty of time and space to create and share.

Writers Working

Writing is a creative endeavor but it is also a business. Writers Working explores the nuts and bolts of being a working writer. From the revision process to how to do a public reading, experts help local writers learn the brass tacks of embarking on a profession of creative writing in today’s world.
